

Clayton, Glenside Station, 1955
View of the station building from the platform

The station building is a two-story structure with a prominent gabled roof and a series of windows along the side. The building is situated on a slight rise, and the platform is visible in the foreground.

The building is constructed of brick and features a large, arched entrance on the left side. The roof is covered in dark tiles, and the overall appearance is that of a well-maintained, early 20th-century railway station.

The station is surrounded by a mix of residential and commercial buildings. In the background, there are several multi-story houses with gabled roofs, typical of the area. The street is visible, and a few cars can be seen parked along the side.

The station platform is paved with concrete and has a low wall on the left side. A few people are visible walking on the platform. The overall scene is a typical view of a railway station in a suburban area.

The station building is the central focus of the image. It has a classic, functional design with a series of windows and a prominent entrance. The building is set on a slight incline, and the surrounding area shows signs of urban development.

The view is taken from the platform, looking towards the station building. The perspective is from a low angle, emphasizing the height of the building. The background shows a typical suburban street with parked cars and residential houses.

The station building is a two-story brick structure with a gabled roof. It features a large, arched entrance on the left side. The building is situated on a slight rise, and the platform is visible in the foreground.

The station is surrounded by a mix of residential and commercial buildings. In the background, there are several multi-story houses with gabled roofs, typical of the area. The street is visible, and a few cars can be seen parked along the side.

The station platform is paved with concrete and has a low wall on the left side. A few people are visible walking on the platform. The overall scene is a typical view of a railway station in a suburban area.

The station building is the central focus of the image. It has a classic, functional design with a series of windows and a prominent entrance. The building is set on a slight incline, and the surrounding area shows signs of urban development.

